FAPC to hold Barbecue Judging Class April 25

“This event should appease everyone’s appetite for good barbecue and teach the fine intricacies of judging barbecued meats.”

Chuck Willoughby
FAPC Manager of Business and Marketing Relations

Stillwater, Okla. – March 26, 2009

The Robert M. Kerr Food & Agricultural Products Center, located on the Oklahoma State University campus, is hosting a class to teach participants how to judge barbecued meats. The event will take place April 25 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on the second floor of the FAPC.

In addition to gaining valuable judging experience and improving their taste-testing skills, participants will receive a certified judging manual and earn a judging badge, said Chuck Willoughby, FAPC manager of business and marketing relations.

“Barbecue is really big in Oklahoma,” Willoughby said. “There are a lot of great barbecue sauces in the market, including well-established Oklahoma brands such as Head Country and newer ones like From the Woods.”

Ed Roith of the Kansas City Barbeque Society will teach the Certified Barbecue Judging Class. The KCBS is the world’s largest barbecue and grilling association sanctioning 150 contests across the United States each year, according to the KCBS.

Roith developed the course after several years as a competitive barbecue cook and judge. He has won more than 375 awards, including 11 state championships. Roith also has produced a barbecue cooking CD that has sold more than 5,000 copies. Having retired from business, Roith devotes many hours to the barbecue industry not only as an instructor, but also as a contest representative.

“The FAPC has worked with more than 30 Oklahoma brands of barbecue sauce – all very good tasting and of high quality,” Willoughby said. “Many Oklahoma grocers will carry up to 10 or 12 Oklahoma brands outnumbering the national brands on the shelf about 4-to-1.”

These local brands, while typically costing more than the national brands, appeal to local consumers’ tastes and preferences, Willoughby said.

“There is a love affair between local brands and the typical grill master or smoke king in Oklahoma,” Willoughby said. “This event should appease everyone’s appetite for good barbecue and teach the fine intricacies of judging barbecued meats.”

The event is co-sponsored by the Oklahoma Beef Council, Oklahoma Pork Council and Oklahoma Poultry Federation.

The cost for the event is $60 for KCBS members and $85 for nonmembers. The nonmember fee entitles the participant to a one-year membership in the KCBS.

To register for the event, call or e-mail Karen Smith at 405-744-6071 or karenl.smith@okstate.edu, or register online at www.fapc.biz/bbqclass.html. The registration deadline is April 13.

Issued in furtherance of Cooperative Extension work, acts of May 8 and June 30, 1914, in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Robert E. Whitson, Director of Oklahoma Cooperative Extension Service, Oklahoma State University, Stillwater, Oklahoma. This publication is printed and issued by Oklahoma State University as authorized by the Dean of the Division of Agricultural Sciences and Natural Resources and has been prepared and distributed at a cost of 10 cents per copy.